* Great Smoky Mountains National Park is in TN and NC, however the park's ozone monitor is in TN.

About the data:

This data was provided by the EPA's AirNow office to NRDC. The U.S. EPA, NOAA, NPS, tribal, state, and local agencies developed the AIRNow Web site to provide the public with easy access to national air quality information. In some cases, a single ozone monitor provides air quality information to more than one population area. This count includes each area whose air quality is measured by shared monitors.

Air pollution triggering the "Code Orange" level is considered by the EPA to be "Unsafe for Sensitive Groups" which the EPA defines as "people with lung disease, older adults and children." The EPA's Science Advisory Committee has determined that levels of ozone lower than the current "Code Orange" designation are harmful to public health; as a result this count - which is based on current thresholds - undercounts the number of days and locations that have experienced levels of smog harmful to children and other sensitive groups.

Some of the data is too recent to have been verified and validated through the quality assurance procedures monitoring organizations use to officially submit and certify data on the EPA AQS (Air Quality System). Therefore, data are used on the AIRNow Web site only for the purpose of informing the public, not to formulate or support regulation, guidance or any other Agency decision or position.

See <http://www.airnow.gov> for more information about AirNow.
